31836	MIT 298-0 Undergraduate Seminar: Big Data & Media Analytics	71	UT	8:30 AM	9:45 AM	NUQ1-245	Jones,Marc Owen	Sophomores and above	Big Data & Social Media Analytics provides students with essential tools and methods for analyzing social media and other media data. The course focuses on practical skills in network analysis, data visualization, and AI-assisted content analysis. Students will learn to use Gephi for network analysis, Tableau for creating visualizations, and Voyant Tools for textual analysis. Additionally, they will develop basic skills in data preparation, including cleaning and transforming datasets. The course emphasizes a hands-on approach, allowing students to apply these tools to real-world datasets from platforms like X (formerly Twitter), Tiktok, newspapers, and other media sources. Students will gain experience in identifying patterns, anomalies, and relationships within complex data, producing visual representations that can inform research or decision-making. By the end of the course, students will be able to define key concepts in network theory and data analytics, create visualizations, dashboards and conduct text analysis. The course is ideal for students in media, communication, and international studies programs, and it also serves as an elective for those in related fields interested in understanding how big data and media analytics shape global discourse. 31838	MIT 298-0 Undergraduate Seminar: Sound and Society	72	UT	11:30 AM	12:45 PM	NUQ2-256	Tayeb,Leila	Sophomores and above	Does the way that we hear change from place to place and in different time periods? How do we learn to listen and to understand sound? This course explores sound and listening as historically and culturally situated phenomena through the interdisciplinary field of sound studies. Locating sound, music, noise, hearing, and listening in a range of locales, we explore the auditory cultures that imbue our everyday lives with volume and feeling. Students will read from a range of disciplines and perspectives on sound, undertake listening assignments, write reflection essays, and explore a topic of their choosing in further depth. This is a course intended to ground students in sound studies as a critical, theoretical endeavor. It complements but does not include or replace coursework in sound production. 31932	MIT 298-0 Undergraduate Seminar: Intercultural & Internl Comm	74	UT	10:00 AM	11:15 AM	NUQ1-302	Akdenizli,Banu	Sophomores and above	Intercultural and international communication. As a result of new communication technologies, the movement of people across borders, global media, transnational organizations and economies, the need for intercultural and international communication understanding and competency has become more salient than ever. This course examines the relationships between communication and national cultures. The course covers theory and research in intercultural and international communication, and aims to identify and describe the many different ways we communicate and interact across cultures and nations. Through a combination of research projects, discussion and case studies some of the issues that will be discussed are: theories of symbolic interaction, nonverbal communication, world-system theory, global flows of information, interaction between beliefs and identities, the importance of power and context in intercultural and international communication. By the end of this course students should be able to read and analyze current research in intercultural and international communication from multiple research paradigms; learn skills to communicate effectively across culturally diverse environments by identifying challenges that arise from difference, increase intercultural competence by creatively addressing those challenges, broaden perspectives of culture and people in general and build capacity to adapt by exploring cultural and international similarities and differences. 31858	MIT 325-0 Film, Media & Gender: Girls' Media Culture	70	MW	4:00 PM	5:15 PM	NUQ1-244	Pike,Kirsten	Sophomores and above	Although media made for girls has long been derided as silly and undeserving of close attention, to the millions of preteen and teen girls who consume it, it is anything but insignificant. From novels and movies in the 1930s featuring teen sleuth Nancy Drew to contemporary films and TV shows such as Whip It, Wadjda, and That's So Raven, girls' media artifacts have functioned as important historical sites for the negotiation of cultural politics and youthful feminine ideals. In order to shed light on the often-overlooked history of girls' media, this course offers a critical investigation of (primarily) U.S. girls' media from the 1930s to the present, including novels, films, TV shows, advertisements, music videos, teen magazines, toys, and new media. We will investigate girls' media artifacts as aesthetic, political, and commercial texts through which youth have interfaced with lessons about gender, sexuality, race, ethnicity, class, national identity, and generation at different historical moments. Although American commercial media will be taken up as our main object of study, students will have opportunities to explore media made outside the U.S. in their own research projects, and we will consider girls' independent production and reception practices in both Western and non-Western contexts. Ultimately, the goals of the course are: 1) to explore the dominant strategies utilized by the media industries to represent female youth and their concerns, as well as those utilized by girls in practices of self-representation; 2) to examine girls' reception of and diverse engagements with media; and 3) to consider how the landscape of girls' media production and consumption has changed, and resisted change, over time. Students will gain an appreciation for the aesthetics of cinematography across several eras and styles, while practicing with the latest digital cameras, lenses, and lighting kits. Students will learn to use cinematography to bring the story to life across multiple genres (documentary, comedy, drama, horror, etc.). They will also learn to organize crew and production schedules for smaller-budget films and be exposed to alternative styles of cinematography. The course aims to examine elements crucial for visual storytelling, including composition, depth of field, and lighting; and to impart organizational principles for an efficient set. By the end of the course, students will be able to make informed creative choices regarding lenses, framing, and lighting; break down a script according to the needs of their project; create a production schedule that will allow timely acquisition of all necessary coverage; delegate tasks to crew members; discover a personal leadership and collaboration style; and match creative and technical expertise to their specific project. 31769	MIT 398-0 Undergraduate Seminar: Theories of the Moving Image	77	UT	2:30 PM	3:45 PM	NUQ1-213	Curtis, Scott	Sophomores and above	What is the nature of the photographic image? How has it changed in the digital era? How does a moving image affect a viewer differently than a still image? What is the effect of editing, for example, on a spectator? What is the difference between film and television, or between those two and, say, theater or painting? Such questions may seem philosophical, but their answers pertain directly to our (ever-changing) experience of moving-image media, such as film, television, or web content. To better understand the persistent power and appeal of these media, this course will sample the range of questions and answers—or theories—of the moving image from the 1910s to today. The course will engage with often difficult texts to understand their arguments and their implications for our contemporary media landscape. Each week will focus on a theme and discuss no more than two essays. Assessments will be based on short posts and either several brief papers or one longer essay. By the end of the course, students will be able to 1) identify key theories and theorists of moving-image media; 2) describe the main arguments and ideas of any given essay; 3) apply those arguments or ideas to contemporary examples of either films, television programs, or trends. Using a social constructivist approach, it explores the relationship between AI, cyberpolitics, and global inequality. In the first part, students will draw parallels between historical colonialism and AI, focusing on data extraction and how technologies developed in wealthy nations exploit vulnerable populations, such as through digital labor or surveillance in authoritarian regimes. Case studies will address issues like cyber sovereignty and governance in the Global South. The second half examines AI's role in racial control and algorithmic bias, with case studies on digital apartheid in South Africa and anti-Palestinian bias. The course also explores resistance movements pushing back against AI's oppressive potential. By the end, students will understand AI's global impact, particularly its potential to reinforce authoritarianism or promote justice.	None	Yes	Satisfies Media and Politics Minor & AI and Media Minor

The curriculum covers key areas such as data preprocessing, sentiment analysis, and text analytics. Students will gain hands-on experience with tools like Orange for data mining, Voyant Tools for text visualization, and DocuScope for rhetorical analysis. Additionally, the course introduces corpus analysis techniques using AntConc, SketchEngine, allowing for in-depth exploration of linguistic patterns. Integration with Google Colab and Hugging Face provides an introduction to NLP models, enhancing text analytics understanding without requiring programming skills. By the end of the course, students will be equipped to analyze and interpret text data from various sources, gaining insights into social media content, literary texts, and other text types. You will scrutinize and evaluate publicly available documents, information obtained via social media, quantitative data, historical records, legal records, peer-reviewed research as well as information gathered from interviews. You will gather and verify information to produce new pieces of reporting as well as adding facts and context to existing reporting as part of ethical aggregation and curation. Students in this course should think of themselves as real reporters, working to produce real stories for a real online publication with a real audience. The best stories produced in this class may appear publicly. This course also aims to give you experiences that have an eye on the future of journalism. The stories and/or assignments of this class represent story archetypes (or story opportunities) that most media organizations consistently publish.	JOUR 201-0	No

Building on empirical examples, course examines how reporting and discussion of gender, poverty, disasters, political unrest, underdevelopment and development by international media organizations affect how the global south and its diverse populations are imagined and represented, and also shapes international and national policy and politics. Using theories of ideology, critical political economy and post-coloniality, the course investigates questions concerning the role of international, national, NGO and subaltern media in development, including the failure of colonial relationships of power to pass away. The course offers insight into how to approach the study of media constructions, discourses and representations of, and about, the global south and its citizens.	None	No

Matters of faith and its practices, contestations, pamphleteering, violence, social backlashes, and fictive storylines are all fodder for media content and for provoking crucial global conversations. In this class, students will be introduced to the surprisingly close relationships between the mighty forces of media and religion in what is arguably a "secular" age. We will take a close look at the evolution of religious content in popular media (including entertainment, journalism, and religious broadcasting) and examine how this all relates to what is loosely called "globalization." 31834	HISTORY 387-0 History Adv Special Topics: Slavery in the Islamic World	70	MW	8:30 AM	9:45 AM	NUQ2-255	fmarc	Sophomores and above	This course explores the history of slavery in the Islamic world from the rise of Islam in the 7th century to the 20th century. It moves chronologically from early Islam to the twentieth century, tracing its evolution across various regions, including the Middle East, West, North, and East Africa, and the Indian Ocean world. It connects practices of enslavement in the Islamic world over time to global slaving practices, which have existed since the outset of ancient human societies. Key topics include the roles of slaves in Islamic societies, such as soldiers, concubines, and administrators, and the diverse experiences of enslaved men, women, and children. Students will investigate slave trading networks, including the Trans-Saharan and Indian Ocean trades, and explore how slavery intersected with race, gender, and class stratification, as well as imperial expansion. The course also addresses colonial interventions, abolition movements, and the legacies of slavery in contemporary Muslim societies. Using a range of primary sources, scholarly texts, literature, and mixed-media, students will critically engage with the historical narratives and debates surrounding slavery in the Islamic world. The first objective of this course is to develop a critical understanding of the different disciplinary and methodological approaches to emotion and its place in political life. To that end, we will analyze how rationality and emotion are conceptualized and theorized in different disciplinary traditions, considering the processes by which private, individual emotions become public, collective, and politically relevant? 31831	INTERDIS 308-0 Gulf Futures	70	UT	11:30 AM	12:45 PM	NUQ2-255	Al Noaimi,Haya	Sophomores and above	This course seeks to disrupt mainstream narratives about the Gulf's 'future'; a rigid concept that often comes from consultants and policymakers. Instead, it explores what the future might look like when (and if) it is imagined by overlooked, marginalized individuals and communities. Students will explore the future through past histories, what the future is (and isn't), the nature of non-linear/fractured time, and how to 'make sense' of common/non-sense. Students will look at the Future as imagined by the Gulf city-state, examining conceptions of modernity, belonging, transience, and citizenship. They will also explore the relationship of humans to technology, and the possibilities it presents in shaping alternative identities and realities. The course uses Futures 'games' and role-playing as a learning method to help practice 'speculative futuring' by engaging students to 'game out' possibilities for the future. 31833	INTERDIS 311-0 Datafication and Society	70	MW	10:00 AM	11:15 AM	NUQ1-300	Mishra,Rajiv	Sophomores and above	This course will introduce students to an interdisciplinary field broadly categorized as datafication and society studies. The course situates datafication in a broader historical, political, economic, and social context with the rise of modern states, colonialism, and industrialization. By exploring the broader context of datafication, students will learn about the connected nature of datafication from the times of colonialism and industrial capitalism to recent times of neoliberalism and digital capitalism. In doing so, the course will focus upon the centrality of various techniques, and technologies that were and are continuously developed, deployed, and used for datafication. Helping students to understand the changing meaning, and purpose of datafication defined, and constructed by states (both colonial and post-colonial), business-technology corporations, and neoliberal organizations. Moreover, the course will also provide a macro to micro view of datafication, trying to unbox the top-down approaches to datafication, and its bottom-up ground realities. In this manner, the course will not only provide an understanding of the way datafication is planned, and operated by various institutions and actors in global, international, and national context. But also, the way datafication unfolds in specific social and cultural context with focus on individual body(s).		No	Satisfies AI and Media Minor

31832	INTERDIS 379-0 Topics: Science/Tech Studies: Asia in Focus	70	UT	8:30 AM	9:45 AM	NUQ3-203	Mohsin, Anto	Sophomores and above	The interdisciplinary field of science and technology studies (STS) have produced many insights about how science and technology were shaped by and shaped societies. STS scholars have examined how knowledge and artifacts are designed, developed, transferred, adopted, used, or rejected by knowledge workers, technically skilled people, invisible technicians, marketers, and all kinds of users. STS scholarship has shown how the development of science and technology are historically contingent and culturally situated, as well as can be gendered, racialized, hierarchical, ideologically influenced, and politically motivated. Despite these important findings, STS is currently still dominated by Euro-American theories, practices, languages, and institutions. But technoscience hasn't only been produced in North America and Europe. This course decenters the EuroAtlantic world as the site of scientific knowledge and technological production by introducing STS scholarship in and about Asia. It explores the question what can we learn about science and technology by studying them in Global Asia where most humans have been living.	None	Yes	Attendance-1st class mandatory

31799	PHIL 242-0 Topics in Philosophy: Introduction to Philosophy	70	MW	10:00 AM	11:15 AM	NUQ3-203	Menge, Torsten	First-year students, sophomores and ABP Dual Enrolled students	This course will introduce students to a range of philosophical topics, questions, and puzzles. Topics may include: the meaning of life, free will, personal identity, the foundations of morality, the social construction of race and gender, justice, and the nature of genuine knowledge. We are going to approach these topics from a number of different classical and contemporary perspectives. As we explore these questions, we are going to practice how to identify, understand, and assess arguments, as well as how to challenge basic assumptions, analyze concepts and draw distinctions. The goal of this class is to strengthen your ability to think, read, and write critically and to contribute to conversations about perennial human concerns.	None	Yes
31824	PHIL 242-0 Topics in Philosophy: Morality and the Good Life	71	MW	11:30 AM	12:45 PM	NUQ3-203	Menge, Torsten	First-year students, sophomores and ABP Dual Enrolled students	Introduction to Ethics. This course is an introduction to the philosophical study of ethics. We will think about what makes our lives go well: Is it enjoyable experiences, being free, having friends, living truly, or something else? We will explore what it means to be moral, think about the relationship between morality and religion, and discuss what reasons we have to be moral. In the final part of the class, we are going to discuss a number of contemporary moral issues. These may include: abortion, euthanasia, the rights of people with disabilities, how to resist injustice and oppression, recreational drug use, family and marriage, sexuality, punishment, the treatment of animals, the moral limits of markets. Throughout the class we will be engaging with historical and contemporary arguments, but the aim of this class is not primarily to study the ideas of others. Rather, you will acquire the skills and tool to join an ongoing conversation about what it means to lead a good life and to be a good person. To that end, you will practice and refine your abilities to critically read, listen, think, argue, and write.	None	Yes
31791	POLI_SCI 242-0 Topics in Political Science: Politics & Pop Culture in MENA	70	UT	11:30 AM	12:45 PM	NUQ3-203	Mekawy, Yasmeen	First-year students, sophomores and ABP Dual Enrolled students	This course will examine the relationship between popular culture and politics in the MENA. Pop culture, such as cinema, television, street art, music, and social media, has been a means of both resisting and shoring up authority, of affirming and subverting societal norms and taboos, enabling the production of new forms of community and publics, and of motivating and expressing political action. We will critically examine examples of pop culture from societies throughout the region, analyzing their connection to power structures and changes in ideology and nationalism, gender/class/religious identity and practice, comportment and urban space, and state power. This course will draw on research approaches in media studies and anthropology to theorize the role of popular culture in reflecting, challenging, and expanding political horizons in the region. 31792	POLI_SCI 242-0 Topics in Political Science: Palestine & Arab-Israeli Conflict	71	MW	10:00 AM	11:15 AM	NUQ1-302	Al Hroub, Khaled	First-year students, sophomores and ABP Dual Enrolled students	The course examines the various aspects of the Arab-Israeli conflict with specific focus on Palestine and the Palestinians. It starts with looking at the history of Zionism and the idea of establishing a Jewish homeland in Palestine; then moves to discuss the consequences of the implementation of this idea within colonial and postcolonial contexts. Particular importance is given to the 1948 war and the subsequent creation of Israel; where the region entered a state of conflict between Israel and the neighboring Arab countries that left devastating impacts. Top of these are the emergence of the Palestinian refugees issue, and the lack of Palestinian statehood. Following the chronology of the conflict with its war and peace episodes, the course intends to critically discuss the conflicting narratives, role of regional and international players and the long-lasting and present ramifications of the conflict that have affected the shape and politics of the Middle East. 31879	POLI_SCI 387-0 Advanced Topics Poli Science: Contemporary Arab Thought	70	MW	11:30 AM	12:45 PM	NUQ1-302	Al Hroub,Khaled	Sophomores and above	This course covers various ideologies and schools of Arab political thought from the late 19th century up to current times, including Liberalism, Pan-Arab Nationalism, Marxism, Conservatism and Islamism. It engages with the main tenets of these ideologies and their thinkers, examining their influence and intellectual activism in the Arab region. The course examines the mixed effects of these ideologies on the Arab world, exploring their approaches to socio-political values and structures, and their endeavors to (re)formulate collective identities. Arab intellectuals who belonged to these ideologies strived to absorb, adopt, or reject sheer consequences created by the 'shock of modernity' on socio-political, economic, cultural and moral levels. Students will acquire deep knowledge of the intellectual struggle between these schools of thought, and its impact on that the cultural and political scene in the Arab world, reflecting both the rise and fall of these ideologies during the long decades of the 20th century and through the days of the post- Arab Spring.
