Overview: Student Employment Program

The NU-Q Student Employment Program has been established by Northwestern to help students find employment to meet their daily expenses whilst providing work experience related to academic majors and interests. Full-time students may work up to a maximum of 20 hours per week while classes are in session and the rate of pay will be determined based on the job requirements. The salary for these positions is intended to cover expenses such as transportation, food, or other miscellaneous fees. Employment under the scheme is only available for NU-Q undergraduate students. Funds are paid directly to students and are intended to pay for personal expenses. NU-Q Work-Study funds are not credited toward students' invoices.

Awards are available to all current NU-Q students and are capped at $5,000 USD per six-month period (Jan-Jun and Jul-Dec) and a maximum of $10,000 USD per calendar year. It is not a guaranteed salary, but an earnings limit and can only be accessed through approved student employment opportunities. Students must devise a schedule with their employers based on this limit and their hourly pay to ensure that they do not exceed the limits for the designated semester/academic year. Students are responsible for finding their own work-study employment. Jobs are only available on-campus at Northwestern's Qatar campus and must/will be advertised under student jobs on the NU-Q website; please review the job responsibilities and contact the job listing department directly if you have questions.

Hiring Process for Student Employment Positions

For each vacancy the hiring supervisor must create a job record in the Student Employment Application. The job record must include the job description, qualifications, method of outreach, term dates, expected weekly hours, and assigned employment level.

If a position is created at the beginning of a semester, supervisors are encouraged to notify the Student Finance Office representative to minimize delays due to high processing volume.

Student employment is limited to a maximum of 6 months or until the approved end date or until the student reaches the employment earnings cap of $5,000 whichever occurs first. Research Assistants may be hired for a period of up to one academic year.

To continue employment in a subsequent term supervisors must initiate a new hiring process by creating a new job record in the Student Employment Application. The position must again be advertised for a minimum of five days.

Supervisor Responsibilities

Supervisors are expected to support the professional development of student employees. Supervisors must provide an initial orientation and ensure that students are familiar with Student Employment policies including expectations for professional conduct, time entry in the Workforce System and the payroll cycle.

Supervisors are responsible for reviewing submitted timesheets for accuracy and approving them in a timely manner. Failure to review or approve time entries may result in delayed payment to the student employee.

Termination of Employment

Student employment is 'at will' and does not guarantee employment for any specified term. Either the student or the supervisor may terminate employment at any time. Upon termination the supervisor or the student must notify Student Finance so the position can be removed from the Workforce System.

Student Finance will not initiate termination except in the following circumstances:
